Introduction

GreenDependent Institute Nonprofit Ltd (GDI) publishes a call for tenders for the services and tasks defined in chapters I.1.3 of the present call.

The tendering is done for the EU 1.5° Lifestyles: Policies and Tools for Mainstreaming 1.5° Lifestyles (Grant Agreement No: H2020/101003880) project and it will be managed by GreenDependent Institute Nonprofit Ltd, which is a partner organisation of the above project and responsible for its Communication and Dissemination Work Package (WP6).

Brief summary of the EU 1.5° Lifestyles project and envisioned website

The IPCC concludes in their Special Report on Global Warming that limiting global temperature increase needs demand-side actions and lifestyle changes. Previous attempts to realise demand-side changes have been hampered by several factors: First, there is very limited quantitative data showing how much a proposed change in lifestyle would contribute to climate change mitigation. Thus, policy makers and citizens lack guidance to make informed choices. Second, there is still limited evidence of public acceptance of drastic changes. This has led to internationally uncoordinated policies and to policies that will very likely fall short on having sufficient impact. Third, policies have usually promoted changes of individual behaviour without addressing structural constraints or structural drivers of unsustainable lifestyles. This has led to policies that remain ineffective and frustrate citizens who wish to make positive lifestyle choices. We aim to address all three of the above issues, by connecting an analysis of individual lifestyle perspectives, on household level, with policies and socio-economic structures, on all levels from international to local. The analysis will be structured according to the emerging 1.5-degree lifestyles approach, which members of the consortium have helped to define. The advantage of a lifestyle-oriented approach is to link concrete transformations of lifestyle by individuals to transformations of the structural context by policies, economic, and societal institutions. This inclusive approach is original in terms of a research strategy. In practical terms, it is very promising as it offers concrete guidance and as it can be scaled to political, social, and economic capacities on regional to (supra-) national levels. We pursue our aims using quantitative and qualitative methods, country-level assessments and sector-based case studies, as well as innovative participatory formats and a broad range of communication methods.

The project has 10 beneficiaries from 7 countries. Find more information on the project and its partners on its current landing page here: <http://onepointfivelifestyles.eu/>.

The website is envisioned to make information about the project and its results available. The main objective of the site will be to facilitate discussion about sustainable lifestyles and the challenge related to prioritising for impact between different actions. The website should include accessible repository for project-related outcomes, public deliverables, policy briefs, papers, media kits, and resources for different stakeholders and links to other relevant projects and initiatives, etc. To make project outcomes on 1.5° lifestyles and the knowledge of experts in the project even more widely accessible, the site will include an “Ask-the-Experts” space. Here stakeholders (policy makers, the media, NGOs, etc.) are encouraged to ask clarifying questions on sustainable lifestyles research. Dissemination techniques will also include illustrations, infographics, publications of broad appeal, and at least 5-7 short explanatory and inspirational videos that will be available in English as well as partner country languages.
